

USA ALPINE SKIING OLYMPIC HISTORY

US Olympic History: The United States has competed in Alpine skiing at every Olympic Winter Games at which the sport has been on the Olympic Program, which is since 1936. The first great USA Alpine skiing Olympian was Gretchen Fraser, who won two medals at the 1948 St. Moritz Games, with a slalom gold and a combined silver.

She was followed by Andrea Mead-Lawrence who starred at the 1952 Oslo Games, winning two gold medals in the giant slalom and slalom. No Americans won medals in 1956 but in 1960 at Squaw Valley, Penny Pitou won two silver medals in downhill and giant slalom, with Betsy Snite winning the slalom silver medal. Through 1960, no American man had won a medal with the best finish to that date a 4th-place by Tom Corcoran in the 1960 giant slalom.

American men finally broke through to win Alpine skiing Olympic medals in 1964 at Innsbruck when Billy Kidd and Jimmy Heuga placed 2-3 in the slalom on the last day of the Games. It would be another 16 years before a US man won a medal in Alpine, when Phil Mahre took silver in the slalom at Lake Placid.

But American women continued to win medals, with Jean Saubert winning a silver and a bronze in 1964, and in 1972, Barbara Cochran won gold in the slalom while Susie Corrock got the downhill bronze. In 1976 at Innsbruck, Cindy Nelson came through for a downhill bronze medal.

American men continued on the medal podium in 1984, when Bill Johnson won the downhill, and Phil Mahre and his twin brother, Steve, went 1-2 in the slalom. Johnson's downhill gold medal would be repeated by Tommy Moe at Lillehammer in 1994, who also won silver that year in the giant slalom.

The 2000s have been the era of Bode Miller and Ted Ligety among the men, and Julia Mancuso and Lindsay Vonn among the women. Miller won two silver medals in 2002 and a full set of medals in 2010 and with five Alpine medals, is at the top of the US list. Ligety won the combined gold medal at Torino in 2006.

Vonn won the women's downhill at Vancouver in 2010, adding a bronze medal in Super G. She is surpassed in Olympic medals, however, by Mancuso, who won the giant slalom in 2006 and won two silver medals at Vancouver, in the combined and downhill.
