

USA ICE HOCKEY OLYMPIC HISTORY

US Olympic History: I was on an airplane flying from Chicago to Boston for a medical school interview at Dartmouth the next day. As we neared Logan Airport that afternoon, the pilot came over the PA and announced, "Ladies and gentleman, we have an ice hockey score from the Winter Olympics – the score is the Soviet Union – 3 – (long pause) and the United States – 4." The plane erupted in cheering and applause.

My parents were in Lake Placid, that day, having an early dinner at a restaurant when some guy burst into the restaurant with the news – "Hey, everybody, we just beat the Russians!" The cheering and applause likewise broke out and then everybody, filled with elation, settled down to their winter's libation and repast. All was quiet after the Eastern affront. But as the restaurant returned to normalcy, one lone diner stood up in a corner far from my parents and started singing "God Bless America." Everyone in the restaurant, including the waiters and cooks, stood up and joined in, the entire place awash in song, their smiles awash with tears.

Such was the day that the United States beat the Soviet Union in ice hockey at the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, winning the gold medal two days later with a victory over Finland. It was the greatest upset in Olympic ice hockey history and the biggest win ever in USA Olympic ice hockey.

There was another surreal victory, however, in 1960. It also came with a win over the Soviets in the penultimate match, followed by the gold-medal winning victory over Czechoslovakia. It carried none of the socio-political intrigue of 1980, when the two nations were embroiled in a decades-long bitter Cold War, with the Soviets having recently invaded Afghanistan. And the Soviet ice hockey leviathan was only getting started in 1960, before they would prove themselves in the 1970s as the greatest hockey team in the world, often defeating NHL squads.

Those are the only two gold medals for the United States men in ice hockey, both on home ice, but they have won eight silver medals and a bronze over the years, most recently a silver in 2010, losing to the Canadians in sudden-death overtime.

Women's ice hockey became an Olympic sport in 1998, with the United States winning the inaugural gold medal that year. They have won medals at each Winter Olympics since, with silvers in 2002 and 2010, and a bronze in 2006 when they were upset by Sweden in the semi-finals. The United States and Canada are the two dominant squads in this sport, and should share the gold and silver medals in Sochi, looking to fight out the gold in the final.

The low point of Olympic ice hockey participation certainly came in 1948, when the United States sorta finished fourth, but was disqualified. Two teams attempted to compete for the United States, one representing the American Hockey Association of the United States (AHAUS) and one representing the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU). The USOC wanted the AAU team to compete, but the AHAUS team was affiliated with the International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF), while the AAU team was not. The IIHF threatened to withdraw ice hockey from the Winter Olympics if the AHAUS team was not allowed to compete. Eventually, they did compete and initially finished fourth, however, they were later disqualified and their finish was not counted in the final standings. Because of the controversy, the IOC originally announced that the 1948 ice hockey results would be unofficial, but they reversed this decision during the Olympic tournament. For years, USOC Quadrennial Reports did not even carry the name of the AHAUS team members who competed in 1948, but instead listed the AAU team members.

One other omission from the USA ice hockey record occurred in 1928. The US normally enters a team in every sport at the Winter Olympics, but in 1928 no US team competed in ice hockey. The AAU ice hockey committee approached several teams about sending a squad to St. Moritz, including the University Club of Boston, Harvard University, the University of Minnesota, Augsburg College, and Eveleth Junior College, but only Augsburg accepted the opportunity, the others refusing because of classes or lack of finances.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chairman of the USOC, refused to approve Augsburg, terming the team, represented by five Hanson brothers (presumably not related to the brothers in the movie "Slap Shot"), as "not representative of American hockey." The University Club of Boston had a strong team, playing the University of Toronto, the eventual 1928 Olympic Champions, twice before the Olympics, and defeating them once, but a lack of finances prevented them from going to St. Moritz. Thus no US ice hockey team competed in 1928.

*In 1948 the United States team was a disputed one as two teams tried to represent the USOC, which had chosen the AAU (Amateur Athletic Union) team to represent them. The AHAUS (American Hockey Association of the United States) team was finally allowed to play by the IOC but their results were later annulled.
